The Brick and Lesson I Found From 26 Years Ago

This article is written by Jon Gordon, a best-selling author, and speaker. He has written 21 books including 12 best sellers and 5 children's books. Jon and his training/consulting company are passionate about developing positive leaders, organizations, and teams. He has worked and spoken with professional and college sports teams, school districts, hospitals, and non-profits.

Jon is a graduate of Cornell University and holds a master's in teaching from Emory University. I (Jeff) have personally heard him speak and is one of the most dynamic and motivational speakers I have heard. I have also read many of his books and word recommend you do the same if you are looking for something to read. I would recommend starting with "The Energy Bus," you won't want to put it down.

One of the most important reasons I follow Jon on social media and read his books is because he is just not a man of words, he lives what he speaks about. It comes from the heart and experiences, but most importantly, Jon is a man of faith, and his faith has helped him get to where he is today.

Now, as Paul Harvey would say, "And now the rest of the story..."

I was speaking in downtown Atlanta this past week at the Outbound Sales conference when I decided to look for the brick I had bought before the 1996 Olympics that would become one of the pavers in Centennial Olympic Park. I was 25 years old at the time and couldn't remember what I had inscribed on my brick to commemorate the occasion.

I do remember, however, the excitement and buzz in Atlanta as we awaited to host the Olympics. I was 23 when I moved to Atlanta after college. I arrived with a few suitcases, a pillow, and nervous excitement about the possibilities that awaited. I wish I could say I had dreams of being an entrepreneur, a philanthropist, and an aspiring writer and speaker. But the truth is I had no dreams or plans. I just wanted to move to a new city and create my life.

I started out waiting tables and working as a para-professional in a school for kids with behavior disorders. I eventually would find a bartending job, get my master's in teaching from Emory University, and teach while I also bartended. One day I asked the owner of the bar next to where I worked if he would ever sell his place. When he said, "Son everything is for sale," I found some investors/partners and, without any business experience, bought his place and made it a successful hot spot in Buckhead.

Three weeks after the bar opened, I met my wife while standing on the corner as she walked by me. She was having dinner with a friend and wasn't interested in coming into my bar. If you read “Relationship Grit” you know the whole story of how she blew me off and I eventually got her to go out with me.

While owning the bar I ran a non-profit I started called The Phoenix Organization (we raised money and volunteered for youth-focused charities such as the Boys and Girls Club), and ran for the city council of Atlanta (sometimes you have to lose a goal to find your destiny) went to law school for a year and a half, quit and went to work for a pioneering technology company that delivered data from computers and servers to any mobile device. I was the one who first worked with the NFL to put scores on mobile devices. We were way ahead of our time and unfortunately were spending a lot more money than we were making.

In 2001 I moved my family to Ponte Vedra Beach, Florida, sold my bar to my partners, and watched my life and career fall apart as the company I worked for crashed along with the rest of the dot.com industry. As I wondered how I was going to provide for my family and pay my mortgage and bills, I desperately prayed and asked what I was born to do and why I was here and that's when writing and speaking came to me.

I thought about all of this as I walked around Centennial Olympic Park looking for my brick that I created what felt like a lifetime ago and many failures and successes along the way.

After about an hour of searching, I was flooded with emotion when I saw it. It had been there for 26 years and had likely been walked on by millions of park visitors over the years. But on this day, I felt as if I struck Gold.

Inscribed on the brick was, "Jon loves Kathryn" and the date of our upcoming wedding. I thought about my past, how I met my wife, the life we have built together, 25 years of marriage, the children that we have who are now 24 and 22, and the future yet to be created.

Looking back, I realize I didn't have a plan, but God did. I think too many young people today believe they need to have it all figured out and have their whole life planned. But sometimes the best plan is not to have one. It requires more trust and less fear, but this allows magical moments, including failures and successes, to shape your life and become your destiny.

-Jon

It has been a while since our church last had a conversation about the future of the UMC and what it means for us in Shenandoah. Our church will be beginning a slow and thoughtful discernment process of how we will express our Methodist tradition in the future to the broader United Methodist Church and with each other. This informational meeting is not to decide anything, but to help us gain the information needed for a discernment process for our church. What is and what is not required of us as a church in light of the Iowa Bishop's Cabinet Leading Now and Into the Future statement? What are the doctrinal issues that are being debated? What may or may not happen at the 2024 UMC General Conference? What are Shenandoah FUMC's values as a church? What options do we have for the next steps? I hope you will join us for this important informational meeting.

A reminder that we have Sunday School for all ages. Classes start after fellowship time at 10:30 a.m. Students meet downstairs in Fellowship Hall and your teacher will meet you and walk with you to Wesley Hall. Questor's classroom is located at the bottom of the stairs, in our church building, and then to your left. We hope you can join us Sunday morning. Here are a few pictures of the kids having fun in class.

A big thank you to the Broermanns and crew who worked on the float for Shenfest and set up the ice cream stand. Your work does not go unnoticed and is appreciated.
